DESIGN THAT RESONATES with both place and people is born from curiosity, courage and a deep respect for the stories spaces can tell. At Jacobs + Interiors, Principal Yvonne Jacobs channels this philosophy into every project, guiding her team with equal parts creativity and empathy. Founded in 2018, the Colorado-based firm has grown from a one-woman practice to a thriving studio of 10, fueled by Jacobs' belief in inclusivity and collaboration. "I like to gather inspiration from everywhere—the client, the architecture, the surroundings—and then start to shape ideas," she explains. "Everyone deserves to feel proud and beautiful about their environment." Embracing change and encouraging innovation, Jacobs leads with trust, gratitude and inspiration as core values. As she reflects, "Vision starts with how we want to feel. We want to feel inspired and connected." That guiding principle continues to define the firm's modern mountain aesthetic and its forward-thinking approach.

"Nothing in this business works without a whole army of people behind you; build your community."

Q&A

EMBRACING IDEAS

How do you define being a visionary?

To me, a visionary is someone who sees what is happening around them and imagines a better way. It's about embracing change, inspiring others and creating something where there was nothing. In design, we are constantly evaluating how we can do things better. We love supporting bold ideas, trying new directions and always seeking inspiration and connection.

What inspired you to launch your firm?

I started Jacobs + Interiors in 2018, nearly at age 50. After decades with incredible firms, I felt a pull to take the leap. The encouragement from clients was overwhelming, and to my surprise, I fell in love not only with design but also with running a business. I enjoy the aspects of mentoring, camaraderie and building a team.

What's next for the firm? We're completing homes in Beaver Creek, Cordillera and even an apartment in New York City. As our team expands, we're building more design teams within the firm to ensure collaboration remains at the heart of everything we do.
